Discussion
The following indexes scientific sessions by general topic, including ethnic groups and especially geographic regions where groups are located. It is not an index of individual papers, but a guide to sessions treating these topics. It should also be noted that this index is largely compiled from keywords supplied by authors; this accounts for some inconsistencies in coverage.

This handbook details Hall's methodology for proxemic research. It includes computer programs, illustrations about the placement of cameras and observers, and an extensive bibliography.

Part One, which contains sections that are theoretical in nature, suggests ways of handling some of the complexity of nonverbal communication situations.

Part Two, which is technical and procedural, is devoted to descriptions of how to use the proxetic notation system, record keeping, coding, etc.

Muriel Thayer Painter: With Good Heart
Emil W. Haury's Prehistory of the American Southwest

The University of Arizona Press
1615 E. Speedway, Tucson AZ 85719

Mokil, a coral atoll in the Eastern Caroline Islands (Ponape District) was studied in 1947 by Joseph Weckler and Conrad Benzel under the auspices of the Coordinated Investigation of Micronesian Anthropology project. Part of the final report on Mokil was a one-hour ethnographic film. The film had only a limited release in 1950 but is now available in 16mm or videocassette.

An extraordinary film, it is organized to show the tremendous pressures that burgeoning population and growing dependence on a cash economy place upon scarce land resources. In exploring these problems and some tentative solutions to them the film touches on almost all aspects of the closed ecological setting of Mokil. Leaving the viewer with a dramatic visual understanding of life at that time of a tiny Micronesian atoll.

This film document is especially significant as a chronicle of an earlier form of a culture which has undergone pervasive changes in the 40 years since the film was made.

The film was shot by Conrad Benzel, now a professional film maker, and produced in collaboration with Mel Stann, Professor of Cinematography at the University of Southern California.

Anthropologist Carol Greenhouse offers an ethnographic study of attitudes toward conflict and law in an American town in Georgia that she calls "Hopewell"—a white, middle-class, suburban community made up largely of Southern Baptists. At the center of the local cultural construction of social order is a complex set of injunctions against conflict. The author draws connections between Hopewell and American culture and society at large. $24.95

CONFORMITY AND CONFLICT
Readings in Cultural Anthropology
Sixth Edition
James P. Spradley and David W. McCurdy, editors
The articles in this best-selling reader, all written by well-known anthropologists and selected for their scholarship, insight, and readability, are accessible to introductory and advanced students alike. Among the 14 articles new to this edition are a selection from Elliot Liebow’s classic Tally’s Corner, as well as an article by Jack McIver Weatherford on “Cocaine and the Economic Deterioration of Bolivia.”

Built around the dual themes of order and change, the reader explores all the major topics in cultural anthropology, providing a solid foundation of key concepts. Selections are organized into traditional topical groupings that complement any core text, with informative section introductions by the editors. A careful balance of articles on non-Western and Western subcultures enables students to make their own cultural comparisons.

The Nuer Conquest
The Structure and Development of an Expansionist System

Between 1820 and 1890, the Nuer of the Nile Basin increased their territorial holdings fourfold. They accomplished this by taking the land of neighboring tribes in expressions of tribal imperialism that continued until 1928. But why? Kelly ascribes Nuer expansionism to the tribe's material needs. In his study of the Nuer, Kelly advocates an approach to the study of historical development that has broad implications for anthropological research into the relationship between social and material causes of change.

". . . a stunning work — brilliantly argued, carefully researched — of general (even critical) value to the field of cultural anthropology. . . . It is of significance also to other social sciences, notably political science and economics. Beside all this, it should evoke cries of pain from ecologists (natural and cultural), sociobiologists, materialists, and others . . . ."

David M. Schneider

A Critique of the Study of Kinship

In viewing kinship study as the product of a Western bias, Schneider challenges its use as the universal measure of the study of social structure. Using his fieldwork of Yapese society as a background for his thesis, the author critiques the claims made by kinship theorists and lays bare their false assumptions. He challenges anthropologists to let societies speak for themselves without screening them through the false perceptions of kinship theory. In the end, Schneider's work is "an attempt to clear the ground of the underbrush and confusion which," he says, "have tended to anchor anthropology in unrewarding ways."

CULTURE AND RETARDATION
Life Histories of Mildly Retarded Persons in American Society
edited by L.L. Langness and Harold G. Levine, University of California at Los Angeles
1986 454 pp. paper $19.50 cloth $59.00
By studying aspects of the lives-in-context of mildly mentally retarded persons in the Los Angeles area, this volume presents a unique application of the methods of life history research. The authors explore the early life experiences of retarded individuals, their patterns of coping with — and adapting to — the demands of everyday life, and their responses to the label of retardation. Also included is an overview of life history research with this population and a discussion of how traditional concerns with anthropology are highlighted by studies with retarded and other marginal populations.

ANTHROPOLOGY AND EPIDEMIOLOGY
Interdisciplinary Approaches to the Study of Health and Disease edited by Craig Janes, Prevention Research Center, Berkeley, California, Ron Stall, Medical Research Institute of San Francisco, and Sandra M. Gifford, Health Department, Victoria Australia
1986 353 pp. paper $24.00 cloth $69.00
As medical anthropologists begin to contribute to efforts to measure and manage behavioral risk factors, it becomes increasingly clear that anthropology and epidemiology dovetail at the nexus where behavior becomes risk. This book presents an exploration of this nexus by reporting findings from original research concerning both infectious and non-infectious diseases of the developing and the developed world. The editors hope to promote interest among anthropologists for researching problems that have been in the epidemiological domain, and thereby contribute to a truly interdisciplinary science in human health and disease.

Jan Vansina

"Oral Tradition (1965) did much to establish what is now itself a subtradition in historiography. Oral Tradition as History is a revised version of that study, greatly enriched by reference to a vast amount of work done by others in the intervening two decades... A necessary addition to all serious collections in historiography and anthropological method." – Choice 1985. Cloth $22.50. Paper $9.75.

The time-slot allocated to papers at sessions of the AAA Annual Meeting makes many of them suitable for publication as crisp articles in ANTHROPOLOGY TODAY, which circulates to over 100 countries, with the fastest turnaround of any international anthropology journal. If you have something to say, why not send an article to the Editor for consideration?

ANTHROPOLOGY TODAY is a new, extremely inexpensive, visually interesting, topical, bi-monthly magazine, aimed at a wider readership than other anthropology journals, and with a worldwide news service. The publisher is the Royal Anthropological Institute. We have our North American authors and readers very much in mind, and are specially interested in giving space to younger anthropologists. For instance, in 1986 we published Philippe Bourgois on Miskitu Indians of Nicaragua, Deborah Pellow on an American teachers' strike in China, Joan Cassell on surgeons. Many of the topics we have covered in some depth - medical anthropology, ethnographic film, communal violence, feminism - are of very wide interest, and we are not afraid of controversy; we think it is vital that anthropologists should tackle controversial issues. Write for a free sample copy, or send this tear-out order.
